

“Building on the Small Moments of Self-Care”

Self-Care Assessment and Daily Attention Diary Overview

In order to pay closer attention to your own care needs, while caring for another, it is essential to carve out small moments that are available for you each day. The tools we have developed are meant to encourage greater attention to recognizing your stress and expand your options for nurturing yourself, despite the demands that you are managing. Although time and resources may be limited, inviting a few “small moments” of self-care into each day can have a significant impact on your health and wellbeing.

You can begin by completing the Building on the Moments of Self-Care Assessment, which asks you to reflect on your present signs and symptoms of stress, and also asks you to identify the current activities that you engage in to relieve stress.

The Signs and Symptoms of Stress Self-Assessment guides you to identify the signs and symptoms that may be evident in 6 separate dimensions of health; physical, mental, emotional, behavioral, social, and meaning or values, during the past week. We have provided a Signs and Symptoms of Stress List that identifies signs and symptoms to choose from in each dimension to assist you in recognizing the impact of stress in each of these dimensions of health.

The Building on the Moments of Self-Care Assessment also asks you to reflect on the activities that you have engaged in during the past week that provides relief for the stress that you experience. The Dimensions of Wellness Stress Relief Activity List can provide a reminder of the activities you have engaged in during the past week to relieve stress. This listing can also serve to provide ideas for future relief from stress.

To complete your assessment and review the stress symptom and activity listing click on this link Building on the Small Moments of Self-Care Assessment.

When you return to the main Web site page, you will find the links to 4 weeks of “Building on the Small Moments of Self-care Daily Attention Diary” which provides daily activities and reflections to encourage and inspire greater attention to your self-care.

You will also find on this page a Post Month Self-Care Reflection Worksheet. Complete this worksheet to review and reinforce your progress and identify future goals.

We hope this daily gift of attention to you will provide greater recognition of your need for care as well as the realization that a little bit goes a long way to restoring you.

Enjoy!

Building On The Small Moments of Self-Care Assessment

Signs and Symptoms of Stress Self-Assessment

Caregivers focused on the care needs of others as well as the typical demands of daily life are prone to losing attention on their own levels of stress. This self-assessment encourages you to bring your attention to how your stress is expressed. Your attention to this will assist you in becoming more aware of your stress so that you may actively decide to invite more self-care activities into the small moments of each day. These small moments each day will build on themselves improving your sense of wellbeing and your resilience.

Stress Symptoms

Stress warning signs may arrive in any or all of the areas listed below. When you notice symptoms in any or all of these areas use them as a guide to attend to your needs for self-care more closely. You may find that if you seem to have many warnings that occur in one particular dimension, this may help you direct some positive care in this particular area.

In the past week, what warning signs do you notice that reveal you are stressed?

Is there a dimension that you notice your stress warning is particularly inflated?

Dimensions of Wellness Stress Relief Activities

Activities that support wellness do not require a large investment of time, money or energy in order to be effective. Identify any activities or moments of attention to yourself that you engaged in over the past week that support your wellbeing.

What activities, large or small, have you engaged in during the past week, to care for you?

Do you see any connection between your level of stress and time spent in self-care activities?
